Don't force our plans off track in race to build HS2 rail network

Exclusive by Marijke Cox
marijke.cox@archant.co.uk

LONG-SUFFERING rail commuters have accused the Government of turning its back on the "incomplete" High Speed One project so it can push ahead with plans for High Speed Two.

The Alliance of Kent Commuters says HS1, launched in 2009, provides an inconsistent service which fails to benefit all of the county's passengers.

What's more, it says the costs of HS2 are likely to fall – in part at least – upon the shoulders of Kent's rail users.

It argues the fast rail line does not reach huge swathes of the county, meaning the so-called high speed trains are unable to travel at speed until either Ashford or Ebbsfleet. And they argue that some commuters are being hit with extortionate costs of more than £6,000 for a season ticket, despite not benefiting from the full service.

Co-founder of the alliance, John Nicholson, said the latest HS2 scheme – which would dramatically reduce journey times between northern cities, such as Manchester and Birmingham, and London – was a "vanity project" for the Government and that ministers should be looking at improving fast lines in Kent before spending billions on another high speed project.

He told this newspaper: "HS1 has benefitted some people, but for many of us it's done nothing except make the classic services worse.

"It all depends on where you live.

"Why is the Government not looking to upgrade the lines here in parts of Kent? Why is it not looking to extend the line to Manston?

"Instead of improving and finishing

DISPERSAL zones are frequently being deployed around the county in a bid to crack down on anti-social behaviour.

FULL SPEED AHEAD: Commuters have called for the full roll out of High Speed One before the government looks to start on a new fast train project

TRANSPORT

High speed trains 'a beneficial service'

HS1, the Government is going to spend £30 billion – during a recession – on HS2.

"Every single train user in the country, that includes us in Kent, will end up paying for this white elephant."

North Thanet MP, Sir Roger Gale, this week called on transport secretary Patrick McLoughlin to see the HS1 service completed to Thanet, adding a "project started had to be seen through".

"If the government wants a seriously good advertisement for high speed rail then the answer is swift and simple; pick up where the last Labour government failed and finish HS1," he said.

The transport secretary acknowledged the benefits of the fast service to Kent and the desire to see the project finished.

Kent County Council met for talks with transport minister Simon Burns in December about the possible extension of the high speed line between Ashford and Ramsgate.

The controversy around HS2 reared its head again this week as the Government released more information about its plans – sparking concern from residents and politicians who discovered their constituencies would fall in its path.

None of which will be a stranger to the people of Kent. Some 25 years ago the county was in exactly the same position as many towns and rural hamlets faced up to the reality of having their homes and businesses torn up to make way for the high-speed link.

MILLIONS USE SERVICE TO LONDON

Southeastern, which runs the service in Kent, said HS1 has been popular ever since it was first introduced.

A spokesman said: "Just last month we celebrated 25 million journeys on the service in the space of three years.

"The fast journeys, quality and connections at St Pancras International has meant that each year more than a million extra journeys are made – we saw seven million journeys in the first year, eight million in the second year and now over nine million journeys each year.

"Customers have given the high speed service a mark of 95 per cent for satisfaction in the most recent National Passenger Survey.

"We're constantly looking at how we can improve our services. Since high speed was launched we've extended the service to places such as Sandwich and Deal and put on more trains at weekends and during the busy peak hour. Our focus is to continue to strive for more improvements to offer the best possible service for our passengers."

It faced a chorus of criticism then – but in retrospect, has been hailed a success for many parts of the county.

Malcolm Triggs worked at Ashford Borough Council when the high speed plans were first unveiled.

"Our main concern was making sure it went through the station in the town – it was arguably going to be outside the town, which the council didn't want," he said. "I think that's the issue affecting some stations in Kent, that the high speed doesn't travel through.

"However, I think HS1 is a beneficial service for most people."

Mr Triggs said one of the fears of people living in areas on the planned HS1 line, when proposals were first revealed, was the disruption it would cause and potential damage to the environment.

"I think the impact is much less than people feared – this isn't an airport, there aren't planes flying overhead all the time, so it's not that noisy," he said.

"I think it's fair to say that their worst fears were not realised, although I know there will be a few affected and that must be heartbreaking for them.

"In terms of the countryside, it's a bit of metal running through and most of it follows existing lines."

Chief executive of Kent Invicta Chamber of Commerce, Jo James, said HS1 has been beneficial to the economy.

"It has encouraged businesses to move into the county, helped maintain the construction industry and is already proving of benefit in developing the local economy," she said. "The much-feared blight associated with the construction of the line and the running of the trains really never happened. I'm sure most people in Kent would now agree that the high speed link has blended into the environment with no more disruption than that imposed by the previously existing transport links and property values in the county have maintained a much healthier level than many other parts of the country."

Details of the next phase of HS2 were unveiled by the Government this week.

It will cost £32bn, be constructed by 2033 and slash journey times between the cities of Manchester, Leeds and Birmingham and London significantly.

Transport economics expert from the University of Kent, Professor Roger Vickerman, predicted that HS2 could be good news for Kent's economy.

"Whilst much of the focus is on the possible environmental effects of the route, a key element of the plan is that it includes a link from the new HS2 route to HS1," he said.

"In principle this could allow high-speed services to operate from Ashford to the Midlands and North, boosting even further the integration of Kent into the UK economy."

He added: "At the same time, experience of living with HS1 in Kent can allow a demonstration of how quickly new infrastructure can be absorbed without creating the devastation being predicted by some."

Music mogul Power insists Hop Farm Festival will return again

Exclusive

By Chris Britcher

chris.britcher@archant.co.uk

MUSIC promoter Vince Power has broken his silence to vow the Hop Farm Festival will return this summer – despite losing so much money last year it resulted in his company going into administration.

But the legendary music mogul insisted to KoS this week the event will be staged at the Paddock Wood site and that he expects to start unveiling the line-up "very shortly".

It will come as a surprise to many following the well-publicised collapse of Mr Power's company, Music Festivals plc, at the end of last year.

The firm began to teeter shortly after the Kent event, when it admitted tickets had blown a hole in finances.

It blamed a perfect storm of a squeeze on spending, the London 2012 Olympics, a flurry of free festivals and the wet weather as ingredients to its disappointing returns.

Shortly afterwards, the company, which floated on the Alternative Investment Market (AIM) in the summer of 2011 valued at £10m, spluttered to a halt worth just £310,000 as shares were suspended.

The three-day summer festival had received rave reviews in recent years, attracting such performers as Prince, Morrissey, Lou Reed, Iggy Pop, Bob Dylan and Neil Young.

Speaking this week, Mr Power said: "The Hop Farm Festival will go ahead this year.

"As you know, we had a difficult year last year... and it has taken some time to deal with."

Just days after Music Festivals plc floundered, Mr Power had All Music Live Ltd up and running out of the same offices in Kilburn, London.

He adds: "It was always my intention to do the Hop Farm, I have the rights to do the Hop Farm and the Hop Farm will take place from July 5-7 in 2013.

"At the moment, we have sold a small amount of early bird tickets and we are confirming acts. We hope to announce the bill very shortly."

However, to further muddy the waters, the Paddock Wood venue was unable to confirm this week whether it would be hosting the event for a sixth year.

After previously insisting the event was due to take place – despite a deafening silence from Mr Power – it appeared to change its tune.

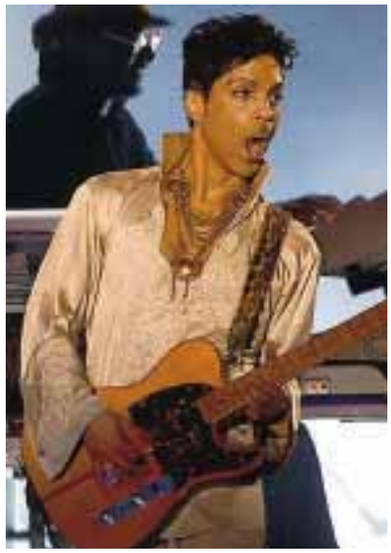

A spokesman said: "We'd rather not comment on this but simply say negotiations are taking place."

With tickets – costing £125 each – remaining on sale in recent months, there had been concerns the event could be a victim of the complexities of the financial fall-out of the collapse of Music Festivals plc and unwitting ticket buyers left out of pocket. A spokesman for the event had refused to confirm whether it would return for 2013 last autumn.

Mr Power had previously confirmed the festival had yet to break even during its five-year history.

It is believed the 2011 event was on track to make a profit when the opportunity to add Prince for his first ever UK festival show became available. It is thought the fee to book the American star was in the region of £600,000 – which despite adding thousands of extra ticket sales, contributed to it making a loss.

The Hop Farm Festival is one of just two major mainstream music festivals in the county. The other is Lounge on the Farm which is due to take place in July this year. Organisers say plans are well advanced and they expect to announce their line-up over the coming weeks.

LET'S GO CRAZY: Vince Power is the music promoter behind the Hop Farm Festival, which has seen the likes of Prince as a headline act

Jobs threat at school

STAFF at the Bishop of Rochester Academy face an uncertain future, according to union chiefs, after the school admitted it was having to look at cutting staff in order to meet budgets.

The school, currently putting the finishing touches to a £23 million new site in Chatham, admitted a consultation process with those affected is currently under way.

The union Unison says it fears up to 30 jobs could be lost.

CRIME

French murder case charge

POLICE in France have charged a 32-year-old man from Chatham with the murder of a woman, found stabbed to death in a frenzied attack in Nimes.

Robert Plant moved from Medway to the town in south west France 22 years ago, but made headlines here for all the wrong reasons as details of the brutal murder emerged.

The body of mother-of-three Joudia Zimmate was found in brambles earlier this week. She had been out jogging.

Mr Plant has been placed under 'formal investigation' by French police, while a judge considers the next step. Any trial is expected to be several months away.

The 32-year-old moved to France when he was 10, and a relative still in the county said he took to the culture quickly.

His uncle, David Ripley, from Dartford, said the family moved to France as Mr Plant's father Dennis was half French. He described the suspect as now "more French than British".

He added: "It has come as a real shock. I feel sorry for my sister, her husband died in the summer and now this. They are such a lovely family."

Mr Plant is understood to live with his mother, Esther. They are believed to live in a two-storey gated villa close to where the body of the victim was found.

The alarm was raised after Ms Zimmate failed to collect her daughter from school.

POLITICS

Tory calls for debate into the future of county council in bid to reduce household tax bills

By Marijke Cox
marijke.cox@archant.co.uk

A CONSERVATIVE councillor has called for discussions into the potential creation of unitary authorities and the subsequent abolishment of Kent County Council (KCC).

He insists such a move would see a huge reduction in each household's council-tax bill.

Canterbury City Council member Simon Cook argued that significant savings could be made if the current two-tier system – involving the county and district councils – was scrapped and services delivered by a local unitary authority for the different parts of Kent, as seen in Medway.

But county-council supporters have slammed the idea, stating that Kent as a whole is a powerful lobbying group that can influence the Government to the benefit of residents.

They argue that groundbreaking initiatives, such as the countywide telehealth scheme – which allows patients to be monitored remotely from the comfort of their home – would not have been possible without the vision of KCC.

Cllr Cook, however, said that making the district councils into unitaries would probably lead to savings, move decision-making to a local level and stop duplication of services.

KCC deals with services including schools, roads and social care. District councils deliver services including bins, waste and housing. Some areas, such as street-lighting, overlap.

Cllr Cook said: "At the moment, some services are delivered by KCC and others by the district councils – some of these overlap.

"These layers of duplication in management could be stripped out if district councils became unitary and delivered all services.

"At the moment we also have councillors having to travel all the way to meetings 30 miles away in Maidstone.

"We have a two-year offset between county and district elections, so one set of councillors always has an eye on elections; removing this would allow more long-term planning.

"Yes, there would be fewer councillors – another saving – but given that the unitary councillors would now be making all the decisions, I don't see this as a democratic deficit.

"This removing of a tier of government could be combined with empowering parish and town councils to further add to the localising of decision-making."

Some district services in east Kent are shared by Shepway, Dover, Canterbury and Thanet, prompting speculation some years ago that there were plans of a shift towards a unitary-type system – a claim always hotly denied by county chiefs.

Cllr Cook said: "Kent is big and diverse. West Kent is different to east Kent. I'm not saying the unitary approach is even viable, but I don't see why we can't discuss it.

"If the benefits of moving to unitary status could be clearly demonstrated, this would be a pragmatic and straightforward way of devolving decision-making closer to local people.

"I have residents contact me about roads or schools and I have to tell them to contact KCC. It would make more sense to have one council responsible for everything."

IDEAS: Cllr Simon Cook

He stressed, however, that unitary status should not be forced on a district council.

KCC argues that it represents the interests of people over a wide area, making it easier to work alongside organisations such as Kent Police and Kent Fire and Rescue Service.

A spokesman said this meant being able to fight for large-scale resources, such as national and European funding, to service the whole county.

Last year, the Expansion East Kent scheme was launched thanks to funding from the Government's Regional Growth Fund following extensive lobbying by KCC and after drugs giant Pfizer's shock exit from Sandwich.

KCC had pushed to secure Enterprise Zone status to help lessen the economic impact.

HOW AUTHORITY BEGAN

THE unitary authority of Medway was formed in 1998, when the City of Rochester-upon-Medway amalgamated with Gillingham Borough Council and part of KCC to form Medway Council.

It is independent of Kent County Council and delivers its own services, including education and roads.

A spokesman said part of the reason it became a unitary authority was due to its local geography.

"It is a reasonably large urban and self-contained area as it has a population of more than 260,000 – one of the largest conurbations in the UK that is not a city or does not have a city in it."

County council

- represents the interests of people over a wider area.
- easier to work alongside organisations such as Kent Police and KFRS.
- able to fight for large-scale resources, such as national and European funding, to serve the whole county.
- helps to carry out initiatives, policies and services across local boundaries.
- a powerful lobbying group due to size, as seen in the influence Kent seeks over the rail franchises and aviation capacity.

VERSUS

Unitary authority

- reduced costs, including back-office savings. Departments and work aren't duplicated.
- public have only one authority with which to deal.
- councillors can play a larger role in service provision and be held to account.
- better strategic direction with just one executive and senior-management team.
- unitaries bring services closer to the people they serve from potentially distant county councils.

Stuck in chest-high mud

EMERGENCY crews had to mount a rescue after a youngster found himself stuck in mud up to his chest off Minster-in-Sheppey.

Rescue teams were called out to save the man, plus a 13- and 21-year-old who also found themselves trapped in the mud as they attempted to reach him.

Fire, police, lifeboat, ambulance and coastguard crews were involved in the "long and difficult rescue". All three were unharmed.

Boundaries stay same

CONSTITUENCY borders will stay the same for the next General Election, it was confirmed this week.

In an effort to cut the number of MPs from 650 to 600, the Boundary Commission had proposed a number of changes – including removing the Faversham and Mid Kent seat held by sports minister Hugh Robertson.

MPs voted out the plans, however, meaning there will be no changes until at least 2018.

The road between Hildenborough and Westerham was shut for several hours after the incident occurred at about 9.30am.

Police say the death is not being treated as suspicious.

VANDALISM: Illegible marks and graffiti tags have been sprayed on the walls and surroundings of Tonbridge Castle in yellow paint

CRIME

Graffiti sprayed on castle

By Chris Britcher
chris.britcher@archant.co.uk

POLICE are hunting yobs who sprayed graffiti on the walls of the 13th century Tonbridge Castle.

The letters THC and THF were clearly visible on a rubbish bin, a glass window of the Chamber Room and some information points.

The West Tower wall, by the castle gate, and the Curtain Stone wall next to the gate were also targeted with illegible marks.

In all cases, yellow paint had been used and officers have found a spray can nearby which is being examined for evidence.

PC Alex Campbell from Kent Police said: "Unfortunately, reports of vandalism in the area are quite common but usually the only items damaged are the bins and chairs in the area.

"On this occasion some of the castle walls have actually been sprayed. We are appealing for anyone who knows who may have been responsible to contact police. We also want members of the public to be on the lookout for suspicious activity in the area in future."

Tonbridge Castle, which is popular with visitors, dates back to 1273.

The borough council, which runs the site, quickly drafted in a company to remove the paint using specialist equipment.

Anyone with information can contact police by calling 101 and quoting YY/1578/13, or call Crimestoppers, anonymously, on 0800 555111.

HEALTH

Lighting the fuse on renewed push to slash number of young smokers

By Chris Murphy
editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

THIRTEEN per cent of Kent's 15-year-olds are smoking regularly – prompting a major new push to get them to stub out their potentially deadly habit.

Despite millions spent on graphic anti-smoking campaigns – and a rise in the legal smoking age from 16 to 18 – schoolchildren in the county are still ignoring the risks and lighting up.

And worryingly, a new report by Kent County Council claims 5,600 more young people will start smoking this year alone, putting their lives in serious danger and damaging their health.

The KCC report states smoking remains the biggest cause of premature death.

It is responsible for more loss of life than the rest of the top five killers combined, which includes obesity and alcohol.

Yet, it is estimated some 70 per cent of smokers want to give up but remain hooked.

In a bid to tackle the problem, County Hall chiefs are set to launch the Tobacco Control Programme.

By the end of 2015, the authority wants to hit government targets of getting the number of 15-year-olds smoking down to 12 per cent.

Director of public health at KCC, Meradin Peachey, said: "We have helped a lot of adults stop smoking, but we were finding young people are still starting. The statistics are shocking.

"Where there is smoking in the home there is a bigger chance of them starting.

"Peers make a big difference, and plain packaging will help too. Social media will also help us to make smoking unfriendly.

"We need to look at the ethics of the industry if young people are desensitised to the health aspects."

Cutting the number of young smokers will be done by raising awareness and education of tobacco issues in schools.

KCC is also developing youth advocacy for young people to assume control of the tobacco control agenda and develop a "youth voice".

This will be coordinated with a new Tobacco Control Board for Kent, which includes representatives from councils, stop smoking services, schools and youth services, Trading Standards, environmental health and police.

A major element will be to "denormalise" smoking.

The £655,000 annual cost will come from the public health ring-fenced budget.

Figures from a report called Smoking, Drinking and Drug Use Among Young People in England in 2011, from the Information Centre for Health and Social Care, found the percentage of those aged 15 who smoked regularly in the UK dropped from a 1994 high of 26 per cent to 11 per cent in 2011.

Anti-smoking charity Ash says children of smoking parents are three times more likely to start.

Another report suggests some smoking children go on to alcohol and drug abuse and have a higher mortality rate.

HISTORY

Survivors recall the 'hideous death' that

On the night of January 31, 1953, weather conditions conspired to deliver a flood that devasted

By Nick Ames
nick.ames@archant.co.uk

IT WAS exactly 60 years ago this week that a natural disaster occurred that cost the lives of hundreds, caused damage equating to billions of pounds today and reminded everyone of the terrible power of the sea.

The floods of 1953 live on in the memory of all of those who were there, who saw huge swathes of the north Kent coast submerged by what was described as a 'perfect storm' of sea and air conditions.

On the night of Saturday, January 31, a major storm surge, high tides and hurricane-force winds resulted in raging waters from the North Sea pummelling through inadequate sea defences along the east coast of Britain, washing away homes, roads and railways and causing the deaths of 307 people.

In all, 24,000 properties were ruined and more than 32,000 people were evacuated. Damage in monetary terms is estimated at more than £5 billion in today's values.

East Anglia saw the worst of the destruction, but Kent did not escape. Large swathes of the coastline from Erith to Whitstable were flooded.

Remarkably, it is believed that just one Kent resident perished – a sluice-keeper from Belvedere whose body was never properly identified.

However, it changed the lives of many Kent people forever. Streets were underwater, railway tracks wrecked, roads and farmland ruined and houses submerged.

Bronwen Sadler is secretary of the Kent History Federation and lectures on the disaster, having experienced it first-hand.

She was just 10 years old and living on Canvey Island, Essex, where 58 people lost their lives, when the waves hit on that fateful night.

She said: "As the sea burst through, people were drowned in their beds, drowned trying to save others, or died simply from exposure and sodden clothing.

"One couple pushed their baby in its cot through a window into the water and it was found floating, like Moses. That child lived, but the parents didn't – they drowned and were found in each other's arms."

FOREWARNING OF DISASTER

The first notification that something was wrong at sea occurred on the afternoon of January 31, when BBC radio announced the loss of the Stranraer-Larne car ferry MV Princess Victoria, with the loss of 133 lives.

Forecasters thought the high winds that caused that tragedy were heading north, towards Norway.

But instead they changed direction and came surging down the North Sea, wrecking telephone lines, so few warnings were broadcast.

The low-lying Dutch coast received the major impact, with 1,800 people reported killed, while waters also raged inland through Norfolk, Suffolk, Essex and north Kent.

Sea defences were in poor condition as repair work had been neglected because of the Second World War.

And once again air-raid sirens were heard – bringing warning of imminent danger to a population just starting to recover from wartime deprivation.

swept all before it

Kent and would change the lives of many

Watching the seawall at Erith breached; soldiers are stranded by the floods; calling for the trapped

Just after midnight, waves smashed into the giant oil refinery on the Isle of Grain and a surge swept inland up the River Medway, which soon became awash with the bloated corpses of drowned cattle and sheep.

As the Joseph Wells fireworks factory went underwater, huge explosions caused windows to be blasted out in nearby Dartford.

Meanwhile at Ridham Docks, near Sittingbourne, cranes toppled into the waters and locomotives were buried under torrents of mud as ships foundered.

Colin Ash was 11 and living in West Minster, Sheppey, when the disaster hit.

He said: "We had no prior warning. Around midnight I remember my mum coming into my room as she'd heard all the ships in Sheerness dockyard sounding their sirens. The old air-raid siren was going off as well.

"The owner of the general stores and post office, a Mr Burnett, was out in his waders ringing a big bell up and down the road."

The following morning Mr Ash surveyed the damage caused by the waters that had come tumbling over the seawall.

"There was mud and water lying everywhere and lots of the houses had broken windows. There were no buses or trains as the rush of the waves had washed away the line, leaving it hanging between two and five feet in the air."

The disaster led to a vast improvement in sea defences and warning systems put into place. They are constantly under review to this day.

And, as Mrs Sadler remembers, everyone took part in the clean-up.

"Sixty years ago, people faced this with a stoicism foreign to today's touchy-feely society," she said. "The generations that had come through two world wars were amazingly calm and courageous in the face of a hideous death in darkness."

Modernising firefighting

IT may look more at home as part of the Moon landings, but this all-terrain vehicle is the latest weapon in the bid to crack-down on fires in remote woodland areas.

The eight-wheeled vehicles can get fire crews and equipment to woods and moorlands impossible for a traditional heavy fire engine to reach.

It is part of a host of new equipment Kent Fire and Rescue Service has acquired.

BUMPER CROP: Many farmers cash in on providing holiday accomodation

ECONOMY

Life down on the farm getting a lot better thanks to the tourist trade

By Joe Bill
joe.bill@archant.co.uk

AMID ever-tightening margins and a flood of cheap imports, the bank balance of many farmers has taken a severe pounding in recent years.

But it seems they are experiencing an essential shot in the arm courtesy of a perhaps unlikely source – the tourist trade.

As more and more farmers diversify to stay afloat, many are finding the option of becoming a holiday location is providing them with a bumper harvest.

The equation is simple; provide holiday accomodation from self-catering to bed and breakfast, and with rates potentially bringing in more than £1,000 a week for a one-week family stay, it quickly adds up to sound business sense.

In addition, it draws more tourists into the county, who, in turn, spend in the local economy.

Litte wonder there are already 30 Kent venues who have signed up to one particular scheme. They include sites in Sevenoaks, Tonbridge, Sheppey, Maidstone, Dover, Canterbury, Romney Marsh and Tonbridge.

Farm Stay UK is one group which has looked to encourage both foreign tourists and Brits to holiday at home and make use of what the British countryside. Unsurprisingly, Kent has swiftly found itself among the most in-demand locations.

What's more, it has capitalised on the 'staycation' trend which has seen many families turn their back on expensive foreign jaunts, prefering instead to stay closer to home.

The nationwide company, which recently celebrated its 30-year anniversary, operates as a travel agent promoting converted farmhouses, woodland hideaways and eco-lodges.

"When we first launched as the Farm Holiday Bureau, with the help of Farmers' Weekly, 30 years ago, we could have only dreamed of the organisation becoming what it is today," said Andy Woodward, Farm Stay UK's chief executive.

He estimates since its creation it has ploughed some £3.5 billion into the UK's rural economy.

Speaking during an event at Brenley House Farm, at Boughton, near Faversham, he added: "We started our 30th year with 450,000 visits to our website.

"It's a wonderful feeling knowing that these are potentially 450,000 pairs of feet through farm gates, each visitor helping to put money back into the rural economy and in turn helping the farming industry to survive.

"More and more of our members are looking ahead to offer unique experiences, putting them in a much better position to not simply survive, but flourish."

The company now boasts more than 1,000 members.

Local food producers, chefs and representatives of the Kent tourism trade attended the event held by Farm Stay UK member Maggie Berry, all keen to learn more on how to tap into revenue streams which can quite often be the difference between survival or financial collapse.

Mrs Berry runs Brenley House Farm, a 400-acre farm which grows that very Kentish combination of apples, pears and hops.

She said: "For a lot of farms it is now an essential part of their farming business. Most of the proceeds get ploughed back into the farm, but that can vary depending on the size of the farm."

Sandra Matthews-Marsh, chief executive at tourim group Visit Kent, said: "Developing and enhancing Kent's rural tourism is high on our agenda and we are delighted to be working with Farm Stay UK."

Pugin's 'ideal church' edges closer to salvation

By Marijke Cox
marijke.cox@archant.co.uk

AN HISTORIC church designed by 19th century gothic architect Augustus Pugin for himself and his family has moved a step closer to raising the £1 million needed to secure its future.

St Augustine in Ramsgate had already received grants from the Heritage Lottery Fund (HLF) to help its plight, but a further £165,000 boost from HLF this week has raised hopes of reaching the magic million to pay for urgent structural repairs.

It comes as a welcome relief for the church, which two years ago faced closure despite its historical importance.

Pugin, who is hailed as one of the greatest British architects, designers and writers of the 19th century, lived in Ramsgate at The Grange and designed St Augustine as his own church. He is best known for his striking gothic designs for the Palace of Westminster, the hall which links the Houses of Parliament.

Father Marcus Holden said Pugin called St Augustine his "ideal church".

"He wasn't building it for a patron, so he wasn't restricted and designed it how he wanted it." he said. "He designed the Parliament building while he was designing this church.

"Pugin is buried at St Augustine."

Father Holden said he was delighted to have reached what he called stage three of a long fundraising process.

Church funds had diminished due to a drop in donations caused by the recession and a question mark hung over its future after the Benedictine monks who had occupied the adjacent abbey for 150 years relocated to Surrey in 2010.

"Two years ago the church was in danger of becoming derelict, of ceasing to exist," said Father Holden. "It's been an ongoing campaign; we didn't want to lose our church. Since it started our mass numbers have doubled, we have people coming here just to learn about the history.

"The Archbishop of Southwark officially made the church a shrine and a place of pilgrimage so we have been welcoming a lot of visitors over the past two years. It all helps."

Donations, grants and fundraising have helped with some of the repairs, and this latest grant will assist in a number of major works, including fixing stone work and windows.

LOTTERY THEIR SAVIOUR

Kent's six churches to receive Heritage Lottery Fund grants for urgent structural repairs

- St Peter and St Paul, Shorne: £32,000
- All Saints, Graveney
- All Saints, Ulcombe: £40,000
- St Mary the Virgin, High Halden: £69,000
- St Mary the Virgin, Minster: £60,000
- St Augustine, Ramsgate: £165,000 (pictured).

St Augustine is one of six cash-strapped churches to have had their prayers answered this week with money awarded by HLF's Repair Grants for Places of Worship scheme. The money will pay for urgent structural repairs.

Head of HLF South East, Stuart McLeod, said: "Historic places of worship form prominent and much-loved landmarks in our villages, towns and cities across the south east.

"They are unique buildings that bring communities together for a variety of reasons from worship through to culture and leisure."

English Heritage planning and conservation director for the south east, Dr Andy Brown, added: "Listed places of worship make up an elemental part of the historic fabric of England.

"It is crucial they are cared for and repaired. Thanks to the joint work of the HLF and English Heritage these wonderful buildings will remain part of our story for years to come."

Crime scene investigation hasn't always been so elementary for our police force

By Nick Ames
nick.ames@archant.co.uk

HISTORY: From left, the earliest-known photograph of Kent's first police force; the BBC's Ripper Street is affectionately known by fans as CSI: Whitechapel

STEPPING into the Kent Police Museum at Chatham Historic Dockyard, the visitor is transported to a different time, coming face to face with clues that can help unravel our county's crime-fighting past.

It is a subject that continues to fascinate us, as witnessed by the incredible success of BBC One's Ripper Street, which stars Matthew Macfadyen as Detective Inspector Edmund Reid investigating crimes in the East End of London in the aftermath of the unsolved Ripper murders.

As well as accounts of crime and punishment, the museum has a collection of early photographs from when the county force was established in 1857.

All officers had to be at least 5ft 9in tall, able to read and write and aged below 40.

Mostly drawn from the farm-labouring classes, the first Kent policemen were issued with a uniform costing £4 16s 2d, handcuffs costing 4s and a lantern and truncheon valued at 5s each.

On April 1, 1857, ex-Army man Captain John Hay Ruxton took charge of the new county force: 222 officers were to police 334,115 people from the headquarters at Wrens Cross in Maidstone.

"The county force was responsible for policing areas which did not have an existing town or borough force," said curator Anna Derham.

Officers patrolled on foot and were later issued with a truncheon, used for defensive purposes. A rattle and later a whistle were their methods of attracting attention or calling for help.

And in 1890 the force bought 20 bicycles at £8 each – the equivalent of about £500 today.

Ms Derham said: "The job of a policeman was not well paid, but it was respectable. The class structure of the time meant that was important."

Vagrancy, sheep-rustling and rural crimes were the main offences Kent officers were called on to deal with, although garrison towns such as Dover, Chatham and Gillingham saw huge numbers of prostitutes.

The Victorian era also saw the beginning of the art of detection, a vital part of Ripper Street.

"It really was early days," said Ms Derham. "Fingerprints were known about but not used as a crime-fighting tool. It was possible to discover whether blood was human or animal – but that was it – and broken glass would show from which direction a window was smashed.

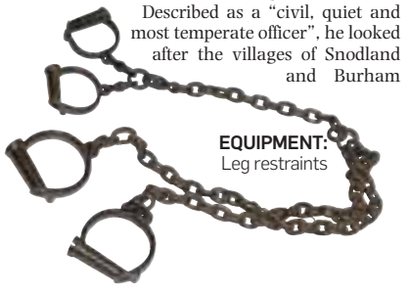

"The time may have seen the birth of forensics, but officers investigating the death of Mary Jane Kelly, the last Ripper victim [according to official records] were photographing her eyes in the belief that reflected in them was an image of her killer. So it wasn't all scientific reasoning."

Most crimes dealt with were of the petty variety, but sentences were harsh and officers sometimes unpopular for enforcing laws that were seen to protect the rich.

Israel May was the first Kent policeman to be killed in the execution of his duty.

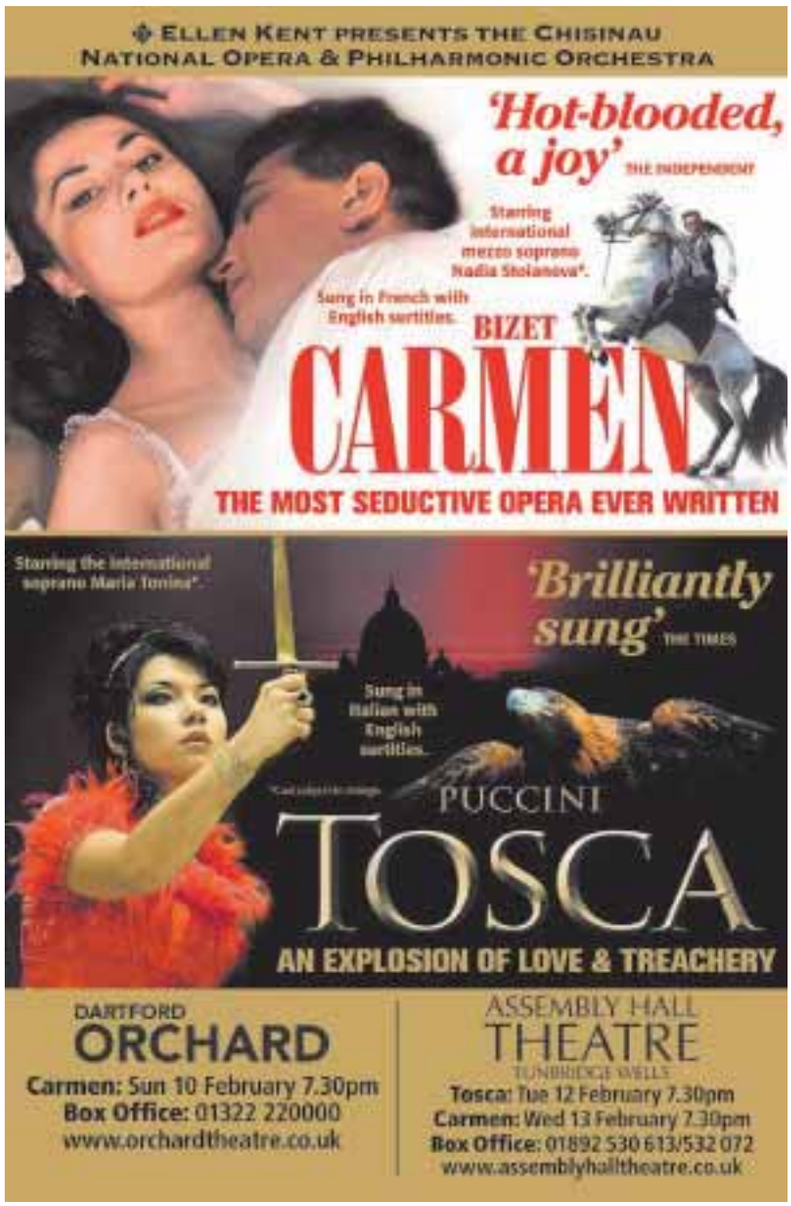

Described as a "civil, quiet and most temperate officer", he looked after the villages of Snodland and Burham but was battered to death with his own truncheon by a man named Thomas Atkins, whom he had tried to waken from a drunken stupor. Atkins served 20 years in prison for manslaughter, which is perhaps surprising for a century that saw 46 people hanged at Maidstone Prison.

Ms Derham said: "We all like to hold our hands up in horror at wickedness, and the Victorian period is one of the first where crime was detailed – and also sensationalised by newspapers. Maybe that is one of the reasons the subject still has such a fascination for so many people."

CRIME

Police defend dispersal zones amid claims bad behaviour is moved along instead of eradicated

By Chris Murphy
editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

THE county's police force has defended the use of dispersal zones to control troublemakers after critics slammed the practice, calling it a "crude, indiscriminate tool".

The zones are increasingly being deployed by police and local authorities in a bid to crack down on known anti-social behaviour hot-spots.

The dispersal zone allows officers to move groups of troublemakers on for 24 hours.

Most recently, it was used in Dartford to ease tension after months of anti-social behaviour by nuisance youths.

But civil liberties campaign group Big Brother Watch said it failed to actually deal with causes of crime or punish those responsible.

Studies have shown that, instead, the streets surrounding the zones bear the brunt as the yobs are moved on.

But Kent Police said it backed the system 100 per cent.

Last summer, one was used in the Twydall Green area of Rainham between June 1 and August 31.

DISPERSAL ZONES

- Dickens estate in Denton, Gravesend, until June 2013
- St Radigund's in Dover, until May 2013
- Grace Hill, Folkestone, until April 2013
- Albion Road, Cliftonville, Margate, three months until January 2013
- Luton ward of Medway, three months in 2012
- Basing Close, Maidstone, six months in 2011

The order gave council enforcement officers the power to disperse groups of two or more people and tell those who did not live in the area to leave and not return for up to 24 hours.

Those who breach a dispersal order can be arrested and handed a fine of up to £2,500 or sentenced to three months in custody.

A Kent Police spokesman said: "In this time, there was a drop in calls reporting anti-social behaviour."

In Dartford, the order runs from the end of January until the end of April in the Temple Hill area. Police say it is needed following an increase in bad behaviour sparking over 80 calls in just three months and a rise in theft and shoplifting.

Detective Inspector Paul Cooke from the community safety unit said: "This order allows us to deal effectively with this problem. We use these measures when there have been large numbers of problems reported and they have a good success rate in helping to tackle local issues.

"This dispersal area is just one tool that will help to ensure offenders and law abiding residents know this type of behaviour will not be tolerated."

Dartford Borough Council leader Jeremy Kite added: "These orders have proved to be a common-sense and effective way of dealing with the problem when used elsewhere."

A study by the Joseph Rowntree Foundation examined in detail the effects of dispersal orders. It found evidence of a "considerable displacement effect" of trouble to other areas.

A Kent Police spokesman was unable to comment on whether crime has risen in neighbouring streets of dispersal zones, saying: "Something like that is extremely hard to quantify and we wouldn't assign blame to a rise, or fall, in crime."

Deputy director of Big Brother Watch, Emma Carr, called dispersal orders a "crude, indiscriminate tool".

"It fails to deal with the causes of crime or punish those responsible for anti-social behaviour," she said. "Like so many politically-inspired schemes, they undermine police discretion and at best push disorder onto a different nearby area.

"The fundamental issue is that those responsible for crime and anti-social behaviour seem to avoid punishment, so new and more bizarre measures are introduced to appease rightly angry residents.

"Criminalising every young person in these areas, simply for visiting a certain part of a town, is an unwarranted and disproportionate intrusion onto the civil liberties of thousands of law abiding young people."

CHARITY

Air ambulance's blood service takes to the sky courtesy of racing legend

By Chris Murphy
editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

ONE hundred patients a year are to benefit from air ambulance crews carrying blood supplies for the first time – paid for by a charity set up to remember the tragic son of a former Formula One champion.

It means emergency crews will be able to provide blood transfusions at the scene of incidents across the county, potentially saving lives in the process. Until now, blood supplies had only been carried on air ambulances serving London.

Now it will be carried on the two aircraft that are shared between Kent, Surrey and Sussex.

And the funding will be handed over by the only man to have won world championships on both two and four-wheels – John Surtees.

The racing hero saw his son Henry tragically killed during a Formula Two race at Brands Hatch in July 2009. He was struck in the face by a tyre which had come off a competitor's car following a crash and was killed instantly.

Following his death, his father, who has offices in Edenbridge, set up the Henry Surtees Foundation to raise funds in his memory.

And on Monday he will hand over a cheque for up to £40,000 to fund the blood transfusion equipment needed.

Mr Surtees said: "The foundation was set up and one day when in his room, I saw a helicopter that he loved and thought we could do something for that service."

The money comes from fundraising events including some at Buckmore Park in Chatham.

The foundation, along with carmaker Honda, will also provide two new Honda CRV vehicles for SERV, or Service by Emergency Rider Volunteers.

In all weathers, these can transport blood between hospitals and the helicopters' bases. In Kent that will be between the William Harvey Hospital in Ashford to the Marden airfield where the air ambulance is stationed.

Adrian Bell, the chief executive of the air ambulance service said: "This will benefit around 100 patients a year."

FLYING HIGH: Air ambulance will now be able to carry blood supplies thanks to £40,000 donation

We must make Dilnot happen

Graham Gibbens explains what action is being taken to reduce the stress people face when paying for adult social care in their old age

DESPITE saving and planning throughout their lives, too many people are being robbed of the chance to pass something on to their loved ones by an outdated system that triggers catastrophic bills for care.

At the very point when they become more physically vulnerable than ever, they also become financially vulnerable – forced to lose their independence and sell their homes.

This flawed system leaves families in fear and misery and has been allowed to linger too long. At KCC, we are determined that it should change for the benefit of all who want something to leave behind.

That determination has led KCC to join forces with the leaders of Hampshire and Buckinghamshire county councils and call on the government to take action now over the future of funding for adult social care.

Together, we believe that MPs should discuss Andrew

Dilnot's proposed solution as soon as possible, rather than see it left on some dusty shelf in the Chancellor's cupboard.

Hand in hand with this approach, we are driving forward changes to the way health and social care work together in Kent – helping people to stay living at home with the best possible support.

It has been a frustrating 18 months since the Dilnot Commission report was published in 2011.

A lack of action by central government has left us without the report's recommended £35,000 cap on contributions to care costs. The time has come to ensure we put that cap in place by 2015.

In Kent, we have launched a Downing Street petition to spearhead a campaign and make this cap a reality. And we are also calling for other local authorities to help provide the 100,000 signatures that are needed to trigger a parliamentary debate.

Right across the country, local government is trying to cope with ever-increasing calls on a social care system that was never designed to cope with the level of demand we are now experiencing. And if the predictions are even halfway accurate, it's going to get even tougher.

The system is quite simply no longer up to the job. Age UK has said it is "not fit for purpose". This crisis needs a solution before it overwhelms everything else local government is trying to do.

Dilnot's proposal is a vital part of this solution and its author said – almost six months ago now – that reform is urgent

Dilnot's proposal is a vital part of the solution and that reform is urgent and people "continue to face fear and uncertainty".

On top of this, providing a cap on contributions would enable the insurance industry to play a part in helping people prepare for the costs they might face in future.

I absolutely believe that doing this is affordable if the government is prepared to reprioritise its expenditure.

It is vital that the coalition government steps up to the plate on this. We just don't have the time to sit around talking about this for another five years.

A solution has been proposed and is ready to be turned into reality. It's now the time for us all to come together to make it happen. Go to www.kent.gov.uk/dilnot2015 and click on 'sign the petition'.

■ Graham Gibbens is cabinet member for adult social care and public health at Kent County Council.

KOS COMMENT

HS2 debate echoes our own rail transformation

WATCHING the TV news reports this week of worried house owners and concerned MPs as the Government put a little meat on the bones of its latest hugely ambitious rail plan, HS2, we can be perhaps forgiven for feeling like we've been here before.

Anyone who remembers when plans to build HS1 were first unveiled will remember the countryside changing forever, the pubs and houses being bought up and then knocked down, and the constant chorus of 'short term pain for long term gain'.

The question is, whether the many gains were ever enough for all the pains. And it continues to divide the county today. HS1 changed Kent – let's hope HS2 will benefit it further.

Keep festival spirit alive

THE county has found itself a strong contender on the music festival map in recent years, with household names performing at several events.

So let's hope organisers of the Hop Farm Festival are right and the event survives despite its recent financial challenges. We may not see its like again.

PCC is just cutting costs

IN answer to your article regarding the increase of PCSOs instead of increasing the number of police constables, it seems as though the Police and Crime Commissioner is to follow the Government's idea of cutting costs.

It is no good having people on the street representing the police force if they cannot do the full job.

I thought PCC Ann Barnes would have given more thought to what she intends to put forward as she worked at police headquarters.

WA Collier, West Malling

Not clever, Mackinlay!

I hold no brief for Police and Crime Commissioner Ann Barnes, but her proposals for the staffing of Kent Police seem to be quite sensible in all the circumstances.

The criticisms of her plans from the defeated Conservative candidate Craig Mackinlay come across as ill-informed political point-scoring.

Not only that, they are politically inept since all they do is draw attention to his own party's controversial cuts agenda. Not clever!

The comments from the Kent Police Federation are much more sensible – "we have to be realistic".

I suggest that the Conservatives find a better spokesman in future and that Cllr Mackinlay gives up on his policing ambitions and concentrates on his Medway Council duties – where I hope, for his electorate's sake, that he does a better job.

Paul Twyman, Birchington

Gills trio for hall of fame

RON Hillyard was an excellent goalkeeper for Gillingham – but I have to disagree with your choice of him for the team's all-time number one (Gills team of the century, sport). That, for me, has to be Johnny Simpson.

Also from that era must be included Brian Yeo and Dick Tydeman.

It may be nostalgia, but those three for me deserve to go in the Gillingham hall of fame.

S Osgood, Chatham

My Gillingham dream team

FOR what it's worth, here is my selection of what I think would be a formidable Gillingham team:

John Simpson, Roy Proverbs, Dennis Hunt, Steve Bruce, Dave Shipperly, Alec Farrel (captain), Errol Crossan, Paddy Sowden, Ernie Morgan, John Meredith and Brian Yeo.

H Morgan, Gillingham

Gay marriage is unnatural

I WAS sad to read the letter in last week's paper entitled Come out for marriage, in which the writer John Worrow of Birchington attacked Canterbury MP Julian Brazier.

This was unnecessary and most unfair. I know Mr Brazier to be a good, honest, genuine man with traditional values. I praise him for this position.

We live in a topsy-turvy world when people want to make what is wrong right and we have become totally preoccupied with the rights of minorities; the majority feel neglected.

Marriage is the union of a man and a woman and anything else is an unnatural shame.

I congratulate an MP for standing up for what is right, natural and, above all, common sense.

I feel so sorry for any child brought up with two same-sex parents. How confusing and unnatural for a child to be in such a home.

I am not suggesting we again criticise homosexual conduct, and people should have an opportunity to have a contract in a stable, legal relationship and safeguard property rights etc.

To suggest same-sex marriage is equal to normal marriage is a nonsense. Often animals make better parents than we humans do.

You don't see an elephant with a lion or two same-sex animals together! They follow nature.

We have become a very intolerant country, with a small minority who are dictating what is right and wrong to us.

By all means live and let live, but as an individual I am fed up with hearing about the rights of minorities.

We cannot and should not defy what is good and natural. Gay marriage is a nonsense and is a contradiction in terms. God made Adam and Eve, not Adam and Steve.

Graham Wanstall, Dover

Europe is good for countryside

AS the Green Party's worker at the No Campaign against the Euro during 2003, I was clear that the Euro had the potential to damage European cooperation. And so it has proved.

However, David Cameron's creation of uncertainty by promising a referendum in 2017 can only serve to reduce foreign and domestic investment in Kent and the rest of the UK.

Even more seriously, the powers Mr Cameron wants returned to the UK include our very limited areas of environmental and social protection.

Returning powers over the environment would make it easier for the Coalition to implement planning reforms that would allow more destruction of natural habitats by development.

Given the exceptional variety of habitats in Kent and Medway, it is not surprising that people in every part of our county have campaigned repeatedly to protect our land against road-building, warehousing and loss of open space and also against hydraulic fracking.

Kent and Medway also need to play a part in increasing UK forests and productive agricultural land, as part of building a sustainable economy.

You cannot do this if, by leaving the EU, you abolish habitat protection and hand land over to those who would destroy it in the name of development.

Of course the EU needs reforms, but, as Green Party leader Natalie Bennett has indicated, our best interests lie in remaining within a reformed EU, not pretending we will be better off outside it.

Steve Dawe, Kent Green Party

KENT REMEMBERED

THE EARLY DAYS: Béla de Csilléry conducts the newly-founded Kent County Youth Orchestra at an event in Tunbridge Wells in 1963; it is now hoped to gather together many of those original musicians

Orchestra celebrates 50 years of nurturing young musical talent

By Marijke Cox
marijke.cox@archant.co.uk

FIFTY years ago this summer, Kent County Youth Orchestra played for the first time to the public in what was its inaugural concert.

Decades later and the acclaimed orchestra is still performing to music-lovers and giving talented youngsters the chance to showcase their skills.

Made up of musicians aged 13-21, the orchestra run by Kent Music boasts 100 players and is celebrated both at home and abroad.

It meets three times a year on five-day residential courses during school holidays; they are always followed by a public concert.

In celebration of the last 50 years, KCYO is hoping to track down musicians who took part in its inaugural performance at the former County Grammar School For Girls in Tunbridge Wells on August 16, 1963.

Geoff Dixon, Kent Music's general manager for county groups, said the orchestra would be celebrating at its annual concerts and hoped to invite former musicians as special guests.

"For 50 years the KCYO, generously funded and supported by Kent County Council, has provided outstanding training and quality musical experiences for the region's best young instrumentalists and gained a reputation as one of the best youth orchestras in the country," he said.

"During the forthcoming season we will be celebrating the orchestra's 50th anniversary and will continue with our long tradition of rehearsal residencies and fully-rounded symphonic concerts.

> Kent County Youth Orchestra is 'all about the symphony' and the symphony will continue to be at the heart of each course and concert
> GEOFF DIXON, GENERAL MANAGER

"KCYO is 'all about the symphony' and the symphony will continue to be at the heart of each course and concert."

The conductor in the inaugural performance was Béla de Csilléry and the feature soloist was trumpeter Barry Kerry.

They began with the overture Oberon by Weber, followed by A Somerset Rhapsody by Holst and Trumpet Concerto in E flat by Haydn.

After the interval the orchestra performed Symphony No. 2 in C minor by Tchaikovsky.

The chief executive of Kent Music, Peter Bolton, said: "One of the ways we will be celebrating KCYO's anniversary will be by revisiting the programme played at that first concert at a special performance at Mote Hall, Maidstone, on Saturday, April 6.

"We would love to get in touch with the musicians who played at that first KCYO concert and invite them along to be our special guests at these 50th-anniversary celebrations."

He said Kent Music would be delighted to hear from anyone who had played over the past 50 years, particularly if they had gone on to make a career in music.

"It will be fascinating to hear people's stories of their time with the KCYO and of some of the great concert venues and tours that our members have experienced over the years," he said.

A concert is also being held on Saturday, September 7, at Mote Hall, paying tribute to the last 50 years of KCYO.

Former members can share their memories and pictures by emailing gdixon@kent-music.com or phoning Geoff Dixon on 01622 358402.

THE INTERVIEW

Richard Phillips

Thackeray's Star man

Celebrity chef's passion still burns bright, he tells Joe Bill

AFTER news that Thackeray's had regained its Michelin-star rating in the 2013 shake-up of the UK culinary bible, it was pretty obvious that chef patron Richard Phillips was in for a busy year.

The Tunbridge Wells restaurant took back its star after a seven-year gap, making it one of only four in Kent currently boasting the award.

With three other premises in the county – The Windmill at Hollingbourne, The Hengist at Maidstone and The Pearson's Arms in Whitstable – celebrity chef Phillips certainly has a busy schedule, lengthened by two TV shows and a book.

The former Rainham Howard School pupil said: "It never stops. That's just the industry. I've been in it for 25 years and that's a long time. I want to be sure that I wake up in the morning and want to go to work, and what makes me want to go in is the need to develop something different or to make customers happy. That's very important to me."

The Hollingbourne resident, who learnt his trade under the likes of Marco Pierre White at The Criterion restaurant as well as the Roux brothers at the famous Le Gavaroche, hasn't ruled out the idea of becoming Kent's first two-Michelin-star venue either.

"Never say never. I will always be striving for more – never sit back and be comfortable with what you have. I think it's important to keep pushing forward with the restaurants. I always want to offer the customers something different.

"To keep them coming back, to keep them excited. I want them to visit again and say 'Oh, that's different and that's new'. Realising it is moving forward and I don't believe that it just comes down to food. It's the wine list, the training, where people are positioned, different cheeses you might be serving, out there sourcing different ingredients.

"I have never been one to cook for guide books. I cook for my customers. If you have a busy restaurant you're doing something right. So could we get two stars? I think we could. There are talented individuals around me, so one day, who knows?

"Right now it's hats off to the team at Thackeray's for their hard work, passion and drive in getting the star back. And I will let them enjoy that for the time being.

"But at the same time they have got to be on their A game – they have to deliver because the expectations rise somewhat when you get that star. It can be taken away as easily as it can come and that is a horrible feeling."

Phillips has come a long way since his days studying catering at Thanet College – a place he now works with to help young chefs – as he enters 2013 with a new TV show and a prime-time slot on BBC One just weeks away.

Put Your Money Where Your Mouth Is will see two celebrity chefs compete to make the most profit from their day's work, but there are a few twists to make things interesting.

"The two celebrity chefs meet in the morning and get a challenge. You have to go into a kitchen you have never worked in before, take it over and are given a budget of what you can spend on produce. You're told the amount of covers you're going to be feeding and then you get into the kitchen and meet your team."

The chefs both create an anonymous menu including a starter, main course and dessert, and diners choose which dishes they want.

"At the end of it, the winner is whoever has sold the most dishes and made the most profit. So if you have bought sensibly and sold at a price that makes a good profit, you win the day.

"It's a good show and gives viewers a look behind the scenes at what chefs do. Buying, haggling over food and creating menus."

And the rivalry to be the king of the kitchen means there is often no love lost between Phillips and some of his new team-members.

"There are some hairy moments", he said, laughing. "You're up against time restraints and given chefs you've never worked with before, so you don't know their capabilities.

"And if they muck something up, you have to buy it again – costing more money.

"I can't tell you too much yet, but let's say that there are some very talented chefs on the show and I had to have my wits about me."

Phillips will also take part in a Channel Four show later this year and finally release his long-awaited recipe book.

"It's been a long time in the making. It's got recipes, secrets and tips from all my years of cooking. Hopefully, people can take my ideas and tips and turn them into a great dinner party, or there's just good home-cooking, which you can execute well and within a budget."

Phillips is known for his championing of his home county and its products, being a member of the board at Produced in Kent and patron for the Kent Young Chef competition.

He believes the county is showing the signs of breaking free from the economic downturn and may well look to expand his businesses.

"No matter what field you're in, if you're doing something well and that is value for money with people getting quality products, then they still go out and spend their money.

"Opportunities where I can expand my business? If the quality is something that I want to associate my name with, in a great location in Kent, and it's not going to be to the detriment of any of my current business, then absolutely.

"I'm sure there's something on the horizon."

A romantic meal is made easy at the Waggon for Valentine's

THE Waggon at Hale is an independent family-run traditional country pub situated on Capstone Road, Chatham.

Emma Pearson and her team offer guests a warm and friendly welcome whether you're looking for somewhere to have a good old pint of real ale or a glass of wine or are looking to dine on the freshly-prepared food – served all day, every day.

Families are always welcome at the Capstone Road pub; in fact, there is a big garden housing its own mini family farm with chickens, guinea pigs, rabbits and, of course, the star of the show, Crackling the miniature pig.

Emma said: "We do not try to be anything more than we are – a warm and friendly country pub serving real food and drink, selected, prepared and served to you by a very friendly team."

The home-cooked food menu covers all tastes and pockets, ranging from simple light bites to the ever-popular traditional Sunday roast.

On Friday, February 1, Emma and the team will celebrate their second anniversary at the Waggon with live music and entertainment from local band Gaffers Duo.

The following Wednesday – February 6 – will see the popular monthly charity quiz return in aid of the Dogs Trust. Join in from 8pm for 10 rounds of brain-teasers, with lots of on-the-spot prizes and tickets only £2.50 per person.

A sparkling new star takes its place in culinary galaxy

RESTAURANT REVIEW

Whitstable. The town that we are told has redefined the perception of the north Kent coast. Not the likes of Sittingbourne or Gillingham maybe, which you fear might never find a place in people's hearts, but certainly the string of resorts that have experienced, at best, varying fortunes in recent decades.

Along with the natty little shops selling anything from handmade jewellery to bespoke flower arrangements, food is of course a big part of the 'New Whitstable' experience.

Accordingly, the town's restaurant offer has exploded. There is a fantastic choice of venue and, while seafood is (rightly) the dominant force, there is a rich assemblage of styles.

Despite some reservations about the whole transformation process, essentially, I think, it is a good thing. With a greedy glance up the road to the capital, the prices at some places are too high, but at least local people have the chance to eat at a greater range of good restaurants, even if they have to save the pennies for a while.

All of which begs the question: what of the humble curry house? Where does that prosaic yet glorious institution fit among the hustle and bustle of the more highfalutin establishments?

Happily, the Indian restaurant is alive and well in Whitstable – thriving indeed, if the impressive number of them is anything to go by.

One of them, Krishna, has developed an enviable reputation beyond the town boundaries, while others of course have their champions, but a relative newcomer, the Star of Bengal, has raised pulses and elicited a sparkling shower of praise on the internet.

And so the Star of Bengal it was. A late night in the office and the need for a spirit-lifting meal turned a wistful longing into a necessity.

The Oxford Street location is perfect in ensuring a healthy passing trade, even if the building itself is underwhelming, an impression exacerbated by the fact that the restaurant itself was cold. Sure, the waiter turned on the radiator by my table, but I took a long time to warm up.

A restaurant, like a pub, should always be warm and inviting, not least when snow is lying on the ground outside and temperatures are hovering around zero.

Otherwise, the Star of Bengal was a treat. Friendly staff and excellent food... a simple recipe that marked it as a place that will hold its own in this culinary cornucopia of a town.

From the spiced papadoms to the starter basket of lamb and chicken tikka and onion bhajis (for two people but, like I said, I was hungry) to the main – I chose the North Indian Special, a medium-hot chicken dish spiced to perfection – to the sides of saag aloo and mushroom bhaji, there was the hallmark of quality.

The vegetables were crisp and fresh and the meat tender, while the texture and flavour of the sauces betrayed the presence of excellence in the kitchen. Whitstable has a new star.

Wyatt and Jones bring British to Broadstairs

THE already-booming Thanet dining scene will get another boost early in 2013 with the opening of a new restaurant.

Some intrigue remains behind the new Wyatt and Jones restaurant to open in Broadstairs in the coming months, with the website of the eatery giving very little away.

It is sure to tap into the trend of buying and sourcing ingredients locally, describing itself as a "British restaurant".

The family-owned venue in Harbour Street will be open for traditional breakfasts, lunches, evening meals and classic Sunday roasts.

The restaurant is advertising now on Twitter for chefs to join the team.

Sportsman hailed in gastropub awards

THE Sportsman at Seasalter, one of Kent's most highly-regarded restaurants, came close to another title this week, being voted into second place in a list of the top 50 UK gastropubs.

The competition, run by trade magazine The Publican's Morning Advertiser, saw more than 500 voters take part, including celebrity chefs, journalists and travel writers.

The Michelin-starred restaurant was the only Kent eatery to make the list, losing out only to the famous two-Michelin-star Hand and Flowers in Buckinghamshire.

The Sportsman also finished sixth in the National Restaurant Awards for 2012.

Drawbridge gets a welcome lift

THE oldest working drawbridge in Britain, at Hever Castle, has had a 2013 facelift.

A static support structure in the castle moat has been replaced more than 100 years after its first incarnation.

The famous drawbridge was installed by American multi-millionaire William Waldorf Astor just three years after he bought the castle in 1903.

The medieval defensive castle, which was the childhood home of Anne Boleyn, was built in 1270, with the original drawbridge and moat forming a barrier to entry when raised.

The drawbridge had been replaced by a stone bridge in the early 18th century, when the castle was owned by the Waldergrave family, but was restored to the orginal style once William Astor took charge of the site.

Work was carried out by oak construction company Scott Partnership, which restored the lifting part of the wooden drawbridge six years ago. The project involved partially draining the inner moat.

Hever Castle welcomes some 250,000 visitors a year, many of whom cross the drawbridge to enter the castle.

Sweet squeeze of success as juice bar makes top 10

By Joe Bill
joe.bill@archant.co.uk

AN independent juice bar in Whitstable has stormed into the top 10 for a national award looking at small businesses.

The boutique venue, known as 63 Harbour Street, was placed among the best UK businesses to have started in the past two years by The Guardian's small business network start-up awards.

The competition ran the rule over more than 130 entries nationwide.

Owner Steve Jones said: "It's fantastic recognition in the lead-up to our second birthday and it completes a great start to the year."

The juice bar was also placed in the top 10 for the Taste of Kent local food retailer of the year award in a public vote.

"We thought that was a great result for our second year of trading. We're very small and still fairly new, so we were truly thrilled. The local food retailer award is about supporting local producers and suppliers."

NATIONAL RECOGNITION: 63 Harbour Street in Whitstable

63 Harbour Street works with 13 independent businesses across Kent.

Steve said: "Several of our suppliers were nominated in Taste of Kent's artisan food producer of the year category, with Whitstable's Waltshaws', who make muffins and brownies for us, and The Kentish Chocolate Company also getting Top 10 places.

"Little Stour Orchard, who supply our apples and bottled apple juice, was nominated for best Kent juice producer.

"So we're selling products that are loved locally, too."

The winners of the Taste of Kent awards will be announced on Friday, March 8.

Write to Whitstable-juices@63harbourstreet.co.uk to find out more about the bar.

Issues may have changed but The Selecter are still keen to get their message across

By Joe Bill
joe.bill@archant.co.uk

IT'S been two years since The Selecter reunited to celebrate the 30th anniversary of their best-selling debut album Too Much Pressure.

And now, with a new album on the horizon, the 2 Tone group are returning to Kent.

They were one of a number of ska and 2 Tone bands to come out of the Midlands in the late 70s; others were The Beat and The Specials, and they found a willing audience in Kent.

The popularity of their music in these parts has helped create events such as Folkestone's Skabour festival as well as ensure venues to countless tours.

Singer Pauline Black is no stranger to the seaside locations of the county.

"Margate has always had a good crowd. In Margate it's always been good and in Folkestone as well. I originally came from Essex, so I had been to Kent many times before [joining the band]."

The group came to Margate's Winter Gardens last year alongside The Beat and Neville Staple from The Specials, but this time at Whitstable's East Quay things will be different.

"This is our own headline tour," said Black – but it will be far from just a greatest-hits show. "We're promoting our second album since reforming, called String Theory."

"There will be some new material, yes, but it's impossible for a band like us to go out on stage and not do hits like On My Radio and Too Much Pressure. We don't see the point in being back together again as an eight-piece without injecting what we feel about today's great happenings in the world.

"We have been back together since 2012 and I have to say this is the most enjoyable configuration of the band that I have ever been in.

Since the 2010 comeback, the band have toured the UK, Europe and Australia, rebuilding their fanbase and picking up new fans as they look to recapture their musical form while also commenting on the political issues of the time.

"If you look around these days, the truth of what ails society again, to some extent, are the same things we were talking about even back then 30 years ago," said Black, who moved to Coventry aged 18 to study at university and stayed in the Midlands.

"In those days I used to perform in folk clubs because that was the only place you could get to sing and play the guitar at the same time.

"People I knew suggested it would be good to go and meet these guys who were setting up a band called The Selecter. And that was that."

The group, whose name is based on the Jamaican word for disc-jockey, had two Top 10 singles as well as a Top 10 album during their first stint and have gathered a cult following.

"People listen to pop and to rock and occasionally if they want a good time people listen to ska music. I think it was Mojo magazine who said 'The Selecter made dancing the only way to walk' and I thought that was a lovely quote and absolutely true.

"It's not like we stand there going on about this and that all the time. The music tickles the brain cells as well as the feet."

■ The Selecter play The East Quay in Whitstable as part of the WhitLive series of gigs. Tickets are priced at £15 and available at www.wegottickets.com or alternatively from Gatefield Sounds in Herne Bay and Whitstable and Canterbury Rock in Canterbury.

By Joe Bill
joe.bill@archant.co.uk

THE annual celebrations to mark the Chinese New Year in Medway will be held across two weekends.

Welcoming in the Year Of The Snake, there will be a show on Saturday, February 9, outside the Pentagon Centre on the high street.

From 11.30am to 2.30pm you can see the traditional Lion Team from Foshan as well as the Dance Alley Dancers, the ShiKon Martial Arts Team, Cantonese Opera Performers from Hong Kong and a special guest performer from China.

Taste the traditional snacks at the street market as the celebrations continue the following weekend on Sunday, February 17, with the Medway Chinese New Year Parade, one of the largest in the UK.

Led by the Mayor of Medway, Vaughan Hewett, the parade will gather at the junction of Chatham's High Street and Military Road at midday and then travel to the Tesco end of High Street, where photo opportunities will be available. The parade will include Chinese dragons, lion and unicorn dancers and more than 150 people in traditional Chinese costume.

To round off this year's event there will be The Wonderful China show – a spectacular showcase of dancing, martial arts, music and magic at The Central Theatre in Chatham.

The production starts at 2.30pm and will feature The Medway Dragon Team, The Foshan and Medway Lion Dance Teams, The Dance Alley Dancers, Shi Kon Martial Arts and special guests from the Cantonese Opera from Hong Kong.

Tickets cost £7.50; visit www.medwayticketslive.co.uk or phone the box office on 01634 338338.

Father Dougal in Canterbury

FATHER Ted star Ardal O'Hanlon will come to The Marlowe Theatre in Canterbury later this year.

Lurking beneath the mild-mannered demeanour of the man who played Father Dougal resides a sharp comic brain.

Sometimes thoughtful, often silly, but always punchy, he has delighted audiences all over the world before landing the role in the iconic sit-com.

But back to his first love of stand-up after a show at Merton Farm's Lounge On The Farm Festival in 2012, the comedian is sure to be a winner.

Cut VAT, says Balls on visit to county

SHADOW Chancellor Ed Balls has called for an immediate cut in the rate of VAT to boost the economy.

During a visit to Dover on Thursday, he also called for VAT on refurbishing buildings to be slashed to the European legal minimum of five per cent.

"There are two things that the Government could do to boost the economy and they could do them on Monday," said Mr Balls.

"They should cut back VAT from 20 per cent to where it was two years ago at 17.5 per cent to provide a boost for consumer spending. Also they should cut VAT on maintenance work on homes, roof repairs and general refurbishment.

"This can be cut to just five per cent and such a move would benefit the small and medium-sized businesses that are in construction but not getting major contracts. What this country needs is some leadership.

"Kent has no Labour MPs – that is bad news for Labour, but it's also bad news for Kent."

From bathroom bling to jam, Kentish firms are at cutting edge of global export trade

By Nick Ames
nick.ames@archant.co.uk

KENT'S companies are at the forefront of the drive to get British products into lucrative foreign markets.

And alongside the manufactured goods and quality foods that are in constant worldwide demand, the county's businesses are forging ahead with pioneering deals to emerging markets.

Gold-plated 'bling' bathroom accessories to Moscow, perfume to Iran and jam to Bahrain are just some of the more unusual exports from local companies.

Other booming markets include construction companies doing business with Dubai and Qatar, fashions for China and its burgeoning middle class... and fast food for Turkey.

Kent Invicta Chamber of Commerce is responsible for the export documentation of goods leaving the county for the global market and represents thousands of exporters.

Working alongside the Government's UK Trade and Investment (UKTI) body, it is responsible for companies understanding the relevant tax duties and import regulations in force in overseas markets.

Business development manager Tudor Price said: "Countries require export documentation on many products and we are there to ensure that is all taken care of.

"It is of great benefit to Kent's economy that our firms do business overseas, and geographically, with the links we have to Europe, the county is ideally placed for the export market."

SHINING EXAMPLE: Russian hotels are turning to the county in search of gold bathroom fittings

The range of products leaving Kent's shores is wide, with companies eagerly analysing business trends and growing markets to see how they can supply growing demand. For instance one firm has set up business flights to Moscow in cooperation with easyJet as the Russian economy becomes a source of greater opportunity.

Price said: "It is very interesting when you look at where business is being done and what the demand for products is.

"Dubai has always been a market for the construction business and it has now been joined by Qatar, as it is set to host the World Cup in 2022.

"For some reason, jam is incredibly popular in Bahrain, and Iran is an important market for fragrances and perfumes. Turkey is undergoing an increase in demand for fast food, so that's another area we have been active in. Bling is also very important to Russia. The top hotels cannot get enough of gold taps and bathroom fittings.

UKTI's activities to promote trade include insuring UK exporters against non-payment by their overseas buyers as well as helping overseas buyers to purchase goods and services from UK exporters by guaranteeing bank loans to finance purchases.

It also shares credit risks with banks to assist exporters in the raising of tender and contract bonds, in accessing pre- and post-shipment working capital finance and in securing confirmations of letters of credit; in addition, it can insure UK investors in overseas markets against political risks.

The South East has the largest total export value of all the English regions at £43.billion for the year ending September 2012 and accounts for 20 per cent of total exports from England.

The EU still accounts for the majority of UK exports, with the US also a big player.

But new economic powerhouses such as China, India, Russia and Brazil are growing in worldwide importance.

UKTI's regional director for the South East, Lewis Scott, said a national campaign was under way to get another 100,000 businesses exporting by 2020, and the agency hoped to help more than 1,000 new companies export from the region each year.

IDS heaps praise on Bluewater partnership for job creation

IAIN Duncan Smith, Secretary of State for Work and Pensions, paid a visit to Bluewater this week, praising the centre for creating tens of thousands of jobs and training many people.

In a visit set up by Gareth Johnson, MP for Dartford, he spoke to job-seekers, trainees and staff at The Learning Shop, a partnership between Bluewater, Lend Lease, North West Kent College and JobCentre Plus that opened in March 1999.

It has since been involved in creating more than 32,000 jobs, trained more than 17,000 people and awarded more than 15,000 qualifications.

About 40 per cent of the jobs have been filled by people living in local postcodes, with 85 per cent in total from north Kent.

Duncan Smith said: "The Learning Shop at Bluewater is a great example of the private and public sector working together to deliver significant and long-lasting benefits to a region.

"It has successfully worked with thousands of people, training and motivating them and crucially getting them into jobs. I congratulate them on the work they're doing."

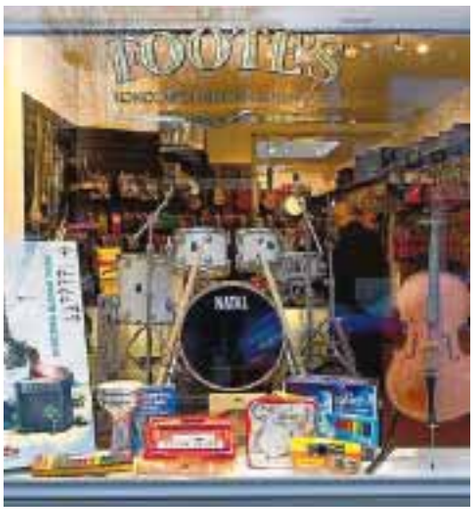

Robert Goodman, Bluewater's general manager, said: "The partnership with The Learning Shop is the best example of this and we have worked continuously to deliver real and meaningful benefits to people living locally and in the north Kent region.

"We are very proud, therefore, of what The Learning Shop achieves and are delighted it is has received such strong endorsement."

Pink Floyd star drums up cash to save music store

By Nick Ames
nick.ames@archant.co.uk

A TENTERDEN couple have saved one of London's most historic music stores – with the help of Pink Floyd star Nick Mason.

The drummer stepped in with a financial investment when Foote's faced closure due to increased rent and the retirement of its owner.

Manager Rob Wilson and his wife Stella wanted to buy it but could not obtain the necessary finance from their bank.

So they approached friends and old customers of the store for investment and were delighted when Mason, who bought his first drum kit there in 1958, stepped forward to help.

The rock legend, who played on classic albums such as Dark Side Of The Moon, Wish You Were Here and The Wall, said: "My reason for wanting to retain a drum shop is simply that it's more than an opportunity to buy an instrument. There's an opportunity to catch up with any new ideas from the manufacturers, new sounds that you can't appreciate online and, of course, to talk drums and equipment with an expert.

"There are a surprising amount of new ideas constantly being developed for what must be the world's oldest instrument."

Rob Wilson said: "At the 11th hour, our business loan was turned down by our bank – it was a major blow to our plans. Without Nick Mason and our collective of generous investors, Foote's would be no more."

Chas E Foote was founded in Hornsey Road in 1920 by Charles Ernest Foote. It relocated to Soho in the 1930s and was bought by the Della-Porta family – the founders of Premier Percussion – going on to sell instruments to top musicians for the next 80 years. Its new premises are in Store Street, off Tottenham Court Road.

Sidcup financial company McBrides worked with the directors to complete an application to HM Revenue & Customs (HMRC) on a Government scheme that gives investors 50 per cent tax relief if they have a stake of less than 30 per cent in any company. Without such investment, Footesmusic Ltd – the new company – would not have been able to become operational.

COMMUTE

NOT CHUFFED! Winter can be a grind

Free space to work if snow falls

WORKPLACE-provider Regus is offering free access to its business centres to help firms in the event of further snow creating problems

Staff whose usual commute or travel plans are disrupted due to the snow and ice can work from any Regus centre, such as those in Dartford and West Malling, helping employers and business-owners avoid an unwelcome dip in productivity.

Workspace in the business lounge of every UK Regus centre will be made available, including free high-speed wifi and refreshments.

Based on experience from previous cold snaps, Regus expects a sharp rise in enquiries for video communications as businesses turn to technology when travel plans are disrupted and trains and flights cancelled.

Managing director Steve Purdy said: "We are offering all affected local businesses free workspace at their nearest Regus centre if it is easier for them to reach rather than their usual commute.

"We know from our customer base that every day counts, especially when times are tight, so we are delighted to offer an alternative local workplace to help businesses carry on as usual."

If further snowfall causes problems this winter, you can phone Regus on 0800 7562495.

Women are invited to put themselves first and celebrate achievements

KENT'S brightest female business talent is being urged to take part in a competition to discover women who are breaking new ground in commerce.

The 2013 First Women Awards, in association with Lloyds Banking Group, recognise the women who are setting the agenda for future generations across a range of sectors – from business and the media to engineering and technology.

Over their seven-year history, the awards have been presented to women who have broken new ground in many fields; they include Diane Johnson, the first woman to be appointed president of the Electrical Contractors' Association; the first female chief executive of the Sports Ground Safety Authority, Ruth Shaw; founder of Specsavers, Dame Mary Perkins; Angela Strank, the most senior woman at oil giant BP; and Thea Green, founder and managing director of international beauty brand, Nails Inc.

Katja Hall, chief policy director of the Confederation of British Industry (CBI), said: "It's encouraging that the number of women in senior positions in UK companies has increased during the last year. The challenge is to keep this momentum going.

"The CBI is proud to support the First Women Awards, which showcase achievements of female leaders."

The closing date for entries is Friday, April 5, with the awards presented at the London Marriott Hotel, Grosvenor Square, on Wednesday, June 12, hosted by TV presenter Clare Balding.

See http://fwa.realbusiness.co.uk/ for more information on the awards and how to enter.

STRONG SUPPORT: Services charity RBLI is looking to help people get back into work

Employment skills offered for families of Armed Forces

FAMILIES of Armed Forces personnel in Medway are receiving employment training as part of a new support scheme from services charity Royal British Legion Industries.

The RBLI has focused on helping these families find and maintain regular employment. It can be particularly challenging with changes in financial circumstances resulting in many looking for work for the first time or returning to work after a long period of looking after children.

The charity has a long history of providing vocational training to the Armed Forces. They have developed LifeWorks, a fully-funded employability and motivational training course for people who are serving or have served in the Armed Forces.

Delivered from their training centre in Aylesford, the new LifeWorks Families has taken RBLI's proven LifeWorks course and tailored it towards spouses, partners and dependants, maximising their employability potential and building on their skills.

Designed around the delegate seeking work, the six-week course includes identifying employment skills and a range of interview techniques. It also includes change-management coaching as well as practical CV design, covering letters and completing application forms. It runs at the Lampard Community Centre in Chatham.

RBLI's Stephanie Cogdell said: "We are being asked about services to families who have to look at their employment options for the first time.

"[LifeWorks Families] provides RBLI's heritage and proven experience in employment training and advice to the Forces partnered with family-support services from SureStart."

If you're a spouse, partner or dependant of someone who has served in the Armed Forces and would like to know more, phone 0800 3196844, email lifeworks@rbli.co.uk, or visit www.rbli.co.uk/rbli/companynews/177/.

Make sure your future job is everything you want it to be

THE options now available to students looking to enter the world of work, as well as people just looking for a change in career, are exceptional.

No longer do all roads lead to university and higher education because there are so many choices in which to find the job most suited to you. If you are a hands-on person and like to get your palms dirty, there are hundreds of apprenticeships in very diverse fields of interest.

Whether you want to grease up an engine with motor oil or grease up a baking tray with olive oil, the right course is out there.

Students shouldn't be disheartened by poor exam results as there are opportunities for everyone.

Work experience is a key factor. You may not have the required grades, but if you have shown the enthusiasm and desire to spend your own time chasing down the career you dream of and putting yourself in the right places then often employers will respect your efforts and take them on board.

And, as the saying goes, you are never too old to learn something new. If you feel as though you're stuck in a job that you don't want to be in and on a career ladder that you don't want to climb, don't be scared to do something about it. There are hundreds of adult-education courses and Open University options available in Kent that don't have to be overly time-consuming or too expensive.

The internet has made both job-searching and the acquisition of new skills a far easier task than it used to be. Sign up for emails from job websites, actively search out companies you want to work for and scout their employment situation.

The most important thing is to be proactive. You can change what you are going to do in the future, but you have to put in the effort and make it happen. The right job won't come looking for you. Use your skills, show enthusiasm and the rewards will come. Good luck!

Students work together to make life so much more stimulating for people with dementia

DEMENTIA patients at the Gravesham Place Day Centre were presented with new 'fidget aprons' designed by fashion students from North West Kent College.

The aprons are designed as a physical and mental stimulant, with the fashion-design Level 3 Diploma students creating the garments as part of their course.

The students researched dementia to gain an understanding of the illness, enabling them to create a product that has beneficial results for the patients.

Karen Fitzpatrick, fashion-design lecturer at North West Kent College, said: "The students have done a great job at turning the idea of an apron into something that can be physically and mentally stimulating for someone who suffers from dementia."

The students used bright colours that helps stimulate sensory and visual perception, including coordination.

The group used fabrics such as silk and velvet, which were popular fabrics in the 1920s and 30s, to aid the long-term memory of the dementia patients. Beads and buttons were added to the aprons to alleviate fidgeting and pacing, which are both common traits of dementia.

WHAT A TEAM! Fashion-design students made a big difference at Gravesham Place Day Centre

Patricia Isted, registered care manager of Gravesham Place Day Centre, said: "We would like to thank everyone for their hard work. The aprons are already having an impact on our clients."

The fashion students were able to gain experience of working with 'real' clients as well as establish an understanding of dementia and the support people need.

To find out more about the fashion-design courses at the Dartford campus, North West Kent College will be holding an open day on Tuesday, March 5, from 3.30pm to 8.30pm. Phone North West Kent College on 0800 074 1447 or visit www.nwkcollege for details.

THE UNIVERSITY of Kent is launching a 10-week course offering the chance to learn about the real world of forensic psychology from some of the leading practitioners in the field.

It will cover aspects of murder and psychopathy, offender profiling, the reliability of eyewitnesses, gang crime, corporate crime and the ways that victims of crime are treated within the criminal justice system.

The course begins on Wednesday, February 13.

Women get decorating

AN ARMY of female painters and decorators are helping to break gender barriers at MidKent College.

There are currently 12 young women studying various levels of the subject at the Medway campus. Lecturer Doug Warren said: "It would be a big plus to have more women in the industry, especially for single mums or elderly people who might feel more confident letting women into their homes."

Building the winning network on the long road to success

MORE than 150 of Kent's business-leaders and budding entrepreneurs attended a special event on Tuesday night to promote local business and showcase the emerging young talent in the county.

A Blast is Back, organised by the Kent Foundation, took place in Oakwood House, Maidstone.

The foundation, founded in 1985 with the support of Kent County Council as an independent charity, provides advice, training, practical opportunities and the possibility of financial support to young people who want to become self-employed or start a business.

Paul Barron, Kent Foundation's director, said: "It is our philosophy to engage and involve people as much as possible in making our events happen and leave those attending with a positive picture of the skills and enthusiasm of those we help get started on the business ladder."

The event even drew the support of Dragons' Den regular James Caan.

What is your business doing to help Keep Kent Working? Do you send employees on training courses to aid their personal development or run apprenticeship schemes? If you have a good-news story, email editorial@kosmedia.co.uk or call us on 01303 817000.

CAAN HE FIX IT? Dragons' Den star James Caan is a supporter of the Kent Foundation annual networking event that took place this week in Maidstone

Speaking in the lead-up to the event, he said: "Networking is a valuable investment for all entrepreneurs – both new and old.

"Make the most of it to turn your ideas into reality and maximise the opportunities it brings to start building and growing your business initiatives."

Kent Foundation chairman Allan Mowatt said: "I am continually impressed with the quality, enterprise and enthusiasm of Kent's young entrepreneurs. Giving them the chance to rub shoulders with their peers at a networking event such as the Blast provides them with an invaluable source of advice, support and encouragement. They have much to be proud of."

Major maths scheme is making adult numeracy skills add up

A NATIONAL initiative has been launched in a bid to boost adults' maths skills across the South East.

It comes after shocking statistics discovered more than two in every five adults in the region – some 44 per cent – have, at best, the level of maths expected of an 11-year-old.

Now it is hoped that the Maths4us project will help improve on that.

It has teamed up with more than 20 national organisations to take strategic action on adult maths ability.

From now until the end of March, it will support a range of activities to raise awareness of the importance of maths as well as tackle some of the challenges in this area.

As part of the process, some 8,000 'maths champions' will be trained to support other adults; an online numeracy assessment took will be launched and a series of online courses will be developed.

Funded by the Department for Business, Innovation and Skills, the Maths4us initiative is being led by the National Institute of Adult Continuing Education (NIACE) NIACE and a number of key partner organisations across the public and private sectors.

Carol Taylor is NIACE director for development and research. She said, "One of the big problems is that many adults don't think that maths is a part of their everyday lives.

"We want to engage people through showing how everyone uses maths every day, that it can be exciting and fun, and that it is not something to be scared of."

See www.maths4us.org for further details.

College gets set to paint the town red

NORTH West Kent College will start a national competition in March as it looks to build on great success last year.

Aron Baker, a student at the college, scooped last year's title of Dulux Decorator Centres' Apprentice of the Year, which means the college will prove the starting point in the hunt for this year's winner.

Now in its sixth year, the contest is open to both apprentices and full-time painting-and-decorating students aged between 17 and 24 and on a recognised painting-and-decorating course.

The deadline to apply for the regional heats is Friday, February 22. Lecturers can find out more at www.duluxdecoratorcentre.co.uk.

Developer set to build on success

By Nick Ames
nick.ames@archant.co.uk

THE managing director of housebuilder Persimmon says that 2013 looks like being another good year in Kent.

Darren Jones spoke as Persimmon announced a trading update ahead of its final results for 2012, which will be released on Monday, February 25.

"As a group, we have increased the volume of new homes legally completed by 6 per cent, our average selling price has also gone up by 6 per cent and our revenues have increased by some 12 per cent," he said.

"Following our acquisition of Hillreed Homes last year, which substantially increased the number of locations where we operate, this year has started strongly for us in the South East, with a number of developments ongoing throughout Kent and new ones opening in Dartford, Sevenoaks, Westgate-on-Sea and Chatham.

"The response from prospective purchasers is also extremely positive and we're confident that Government schemes including NewBuy and FirstBuy will continue to support our sales even further."

Persimmon, together with sister companies Charles Church, Westbury Partnerships and Hillreed Homes, legally completed 9,903 homes last year (9,360 in 2011).

The average selling price was £173,400 (2011: £163,999), and revenues for the period totalled £1.72 billion (2011: £1.54 bn).

Nationally, Persimmon has recently secured an additional allocation of 3,000 new homes as part of the Government's FirstBuy funding, which Mr Jones says will lead to further opportunities for first-time buyers in the region.

He said: "As we look forward to the busy spring selling season, we're sure schemes like FirstBuy will offer many people that first vital step on to the housing ladder."

It's an admiral's life in this home

IMAGINE waking up to view one of Brtiain's most historic areas of interest. Or perhaps eating breakfast to the sound of Russell Crowe and Hugh Jackman crossing swords on a Hollywood film set.

Well, the dream could become a reality as the Admiral's Cottage in Chatham's Historic Dockyard is on sale for £850,000.

The detached Grade II-listed home has been carefully refurbished by the current owners after purchasing the property from the dockyard.

The cottage is a unique place to live, with 24-hour security at the dockyard gate house and a view of the Medway.

The Admiral's Cottage was built in 1830 for the then newly-appointed dockyard chief engineer. Since the house has been the official residence of many visiting admirals whose fleets were docked at Chatham while being repaired.

In 1984 the Royal Navy ended its 400-year association with the Medway and the dockyard at Chatham and the area is now maintained by Chatham Historic Dockyard Trust. The charity oversees the preservation of both the residential and commercial buildings on the site.

Whoever buys the Admiral's Cottage will be in good company as the Georgian yard contains 100 listed buildings, of which 47 are classed as Scheduled Ancient Monuments.

Panda 4x4 also goes Trekking

SOME 30 years ago, Fiat unveiled a 4x4 version of its Panda budget car that nobody even realised there was a need for.

Far from being a gimmick, Fiat had engaged the renowned experience of Austria's Steyr-Puch to create a serious all-wheel-drive powertrain. It was soon being tested in endurance rallies, as well as being driven to the Mount Everest base camp.

The tiny affordable go-anywhere car attracted a legion of fans, who recognised that what it lacked in brute force it more than made up for with a lightness enabling it to skip over terrain troubling much bigger machines.

When Fiat belatedly created a second-generation Panda in 2003 – the old car had been phased out in the mid-1990s – it was natural the 4x4 should be revived and have a market niche to itself, especially as the five-door body offered even more workhorse potential.

The same formula has been repeated now with the third-generation car, which is even more versatile.

But there's a new twist: apart from the 4x4 model itself, Fiat is also launching a front-wheel-drive-only Trekking version, recognising that many buyers want the 'funky chunky' off-road look yet don't want to pay extra for it.

With questionable marketing zeal, though, the brand is claiming the Panda Trekking as the world's first CUV or City Utility Vehicle – I hope the phrase doesn't catch on.

CUV or not, the Trekking has the Panda 4x4's short overhangs, plus raised ride height and ground clearance, but combines front-wheel-drive with a sophisticated traction-control system to combat slippery surfaces.

Apart from that, it mirrors its 4x4 sister, offering a choice between Fiat's award-winning 875cc TwinAir Turbo petrol or 1.3-litre MultiJet 2 turbodiesel, both equipped with stop-go and gearshift indicator fuel-saving features and quoted with an official combined mpg of about 60. Back seats can be organised in various permutations, while 15 storage compartments beats the regular Panda by one.

For this end of the market, the 4x4 has a remarkably sophisticated permanent all-wheel-drive system that apportions power between the front and rear axles depending on the amount of grip available – no driver input is needed.

Most of the time, though, 98 per cent of the engine power is via the front wheels, meaning the car behaves much like a front-wheel-drive.

Fiat says it has also gone to great lengths to ensure both chunky Pandas remain comfortable and capable on-road, using an improved and lighter rear suspension compared with the previous version.

Cosmetics include special bumpers, side-skirts and wheel-arch mouldings, door handles and mirror fairings specific to these two Panda models, black longitudinal roof-bars and protective side-strips, plus 15-inch alloys.

UTILITY: Marketed for both the city and off-roading, the Panda Trekking offers more versatility than the brand's previous 4x4s, while retaining a number of precious appealing factors

DON'T LIKE

... the CUV or City Utility Vehicle marketing speak for the Trekking. I sincerely hope other carmakers don't pick it up and run with it.

NOT SURE

... this latest chunky Panda has quite the visual appeal of the previous 4x4 model, but the Trekking is an interesting new sales spin.

REALLY LIKE

... the fact that, for those who need it, decent off-road ability as well as on-road comfort is actually cheap to buy and afford day-to-day.

Seat set for year-on-year sales sprint

By Steve Loader
editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

SPORTY Spanish marque Seat has just completed its most successful year on the UK market.

Sales and market share (1.9 per cent) set brand records here and the VW-owned firm looks set to go even higher in 2013 with the arrival of its all-new third-generation Leon family hatchback in March, to be offered in three-door (SC) and estate (ST) formats this time, in addition to the familiar five-door.

But you wouldn't know the current model was heading for retirement after hearing that 2012 was the second best year ever for Leon UK sales.

Volumes have also been boosted by creation of Seat's widest-ever range of cars, following last year's arrival of the Mii city car and the Toledo budget family model (from £12,495), the latter slotting in below the next Leon.

The Toledo's appeal is not simply price-led; it might look like a saloon, but a hatchback opening to the boot boosts practicality and it is also available in SEAT's impressive high-economy/low-emission Ecomotive form (from £16,640).

Talking of economy, the Mii three- and five-door is now available with an automatic gearbox (from £10,390) capable of even better fuel economy – official combined 62.8mpg – than its manual equivalent, creating a highly desirable urban runabout while retaining the option to select gears manually and enjoy the Mii's driver-pleasing chassis.

TOP-SELLERS: The Toledo, above, is the budget star, while the Mii, below, is now available in economical automatic format

For those at the other end of the buying spectrum, needing maximum people capacity, Seat has launched value-added Copa special editions of its Altea MPV and its stretched XL sister, starting at £16,425 and adding up to £1,500 of extra equipment.

The racy-looking Altea is a rare beast – a sporty MPV – but it also has a big brother in the Alhambra, which has just landed the prestigious What Car? Best MPV award for the third year running, with judges lauding it as a "fantastic all-round package".

Other Seat deals include Toca editions of the Mii and Seat's best-seller, the sharply-styled Ibiza supermini.

Toca is Spanish for touch, so these versions get a touch-screen sat-nav and driver interface, but they also gain additional goodies, with prices from £9,845 for the Mii Toca and £12,700 for the Ibiza Toca.

BEHIND THE NAME

SPAIN'S carmaking history had been sketchy up to 1950, when that nation's government set up SEAT – an acronym for Spanish Touring Car Company in English.

It began as a partnership with Fiat, essentially producing re-badged versions of the Italian marque's cars. When the relationship soured in the 1980s, SEAT briefly went independent, collaborating with Porsche to create powertrains that for a time bore the label System Porsche.

But Germany's VW – hunting locations to make cheap small cars – was soon stalking the vulnerable Spanish firm and began buying chunks of shares, gaining a controlling interest in 1986 and full control in 1990.

Unlike the Fiat days, though, modern SEATs have tended to be stand-alone designs, even if powertrains and some detailing come from across the VW group.

Twickenham can see England home in Six Nations, says former Wells ace

Ex-captain and World Cup-winner feels home ties hold key to success for Stuart Lancaster's side

By Greg Miles
greg.miles@archant.co.uk

MARTIN Corry, England's former captain and World Cup-winner, has backed Stuart Lancaster's men to bring home the Six Nations, which kicks off this weekend.

The 39-year-old, who's more likely to be office-bound or commuting these days in his new life at a multinational IT firm, still pays close attention to the game in which he had such a fruitful career and feels England can pick up from where they left off in the autumn internationals when they stunned New Zealand.

The flanker, who was part of the 2003 England side that triumphed in extra time over Australia, as well as the 2007 team that lost in the final to South Africa, feels the fixtures fall in England's favour but is wary of the threat of France.

"I think the autumn internationals have changed a lot people's perceptions," he said.

"You would have said before then that the major danger coming out of Britain would have been Wales.

"But they had a stinker in autumn and England finished incredibly with that win against New Zealand. Out of the other teams, you think France would start as favourites. The big question is, can England re-create the same form as they did against New Zealand? I think they can.

"When predicting the Six Nations, you have got to look at where the games are being played.

"If it was a two-game tournament where you played home and away, it would probably be between England and France, but England have got to play Ireland and Wales away, which makes it more difficult.

"I think England are very well placed, though. The fact they are playing France at home will prove to be the decisive factor."

It's set to be one of the tightest Six Nations in recent history, with Wales aiming to defend their crown after a disappointing end to 2012, Scotland hoping to hold their own under interim boss Scott Johnson, and Ireland and France always posing a threat.

England, captained by Chris Robshaw, will be without Alex Corbisiero for the tournament but have a growing expectation under Lancaster after a promising end to the year.

It is also a chance for an emergence of talent to impress British Lions manager Warren Gatland ahead of the summer tour of Australia.

For Corry it's a reminder of his professional career, which he brought to an end in 2009.

These days he's a sales director for software firm Oracle, a strange choice for a man who admits to being a bit of a technophobe only three years ago.

Thankfully, he has left behind some of his rugby-playing habits while making his way in the office environment.

"I'm not rugby-tackling people when they annoy me," he said. "Rugby is always going to be a big part of my life and I don't have a problem with that.

"Everything I do needs to have a challenge – that's what I like and that's what I need to focus my mind."

It's that love of a challenge that led him to raise thousands of pounds for charity before the Six Nations last year.

However, this year he's back to being a fan in the stand or in the pub.

"I'm always partial to a fund-raising challenge of some description," he said.

"I've not got any planned for this year. I will be going to all of England's home games and will be there in Ireland because I'm playing a charity match the night before.

"I might watch the rest at the pub."

His long and successful career started in Tunbridge Wells, a club he still holds close to his heart and visits occasionally, having previously been a coaching consultant.

"I moved down from Birmingham and the first thing I did was join the local rugby club," he said. "Wells set me up for life – I had great times there. The players I played with back then I'm still in contact with now. That's the biggest thing about club rugby."

MARTIN CORRY'S TEAM-BY-TEAM SIX NATIONS ANALYSIS

ENGLAND
Key player: Dan Cole, tighthead prop
Corry's view: We have got very few players we could say are the best in the world. I think Dan is one. At every stage he seems to get better and better. I would be interested to see what Stuart Lancaster does at number 12. Personally, I would like to see Billy Twelvetrees given an opportunity to play.

FRANCE
Key player: Wesley Fofana, wing/centre
Corry's view: France have got a wealth of options on the wing. The more they can get Fofana into the game, the more successful they will be.

WALES
Key player: George North, winger
Corry's view: There will be calls to move North into the centre, but I think that will be a poor decision. As a winger, on his day he can be really devastating against any opposition.

SCOTLAND
Key player: Richie Gray, lock
Corry's view: Scotland are going to have a tough time, but it's an opportunity for Richie Gray. He first entered the international scene and was fantastic but moved to Sale and has been very poor of late. If he wants to prove he's the best lock in the British Isles he needs to put in some big performances this Six Nations.

IRELAND
Key player: Brian O'Driscoll, centre
Corry's view: It's the return of Brian O'Driscoll. He's had the captaincy taken away from him and has struggled recently with injuries, but he can be a big player. Time and time again he is Ireland's talisman.

ITALY
Key player: The team
Corry's view: I think with Italy, it's not about the players – it's their style of play. They have been really disappointing – they go into games with damage limitation in mind from the start. They have got good players but are trying not to make mistakes as opposed to going out to play.

Priestfield under the spotlight in TV clash

GILLINGHAM'S promotion push will be thrust into the national limelight on Monday night as Sky Sports comes to Priestfield.

The Gills' clash with Wycombe Wanderers, which kicks off at 7.45pm, will be aired on Sky Sports 1. The programme starts at 7.30pm.

Martin Allen's side will be looking to establish a good run at home after their 2-0 win over Northampton Town last Tuesday night, ending two months without a win on home turf.

The Gills defeated Wycombe in their second game of the season at Adams Park in August with a 1-0 win.

MOTORSPORT

Conway back on track for Long Beach drive

BROMLEY'S Mike Conway has announced his return to the IndyCar series for a one-off drive.

He pulled out of the final race of last season at the Auto Club Speedway, while driving for AJ Foyt, admitting he was no longer comfortable driving on the high-speed oval circuits, having suffered serious crashes in recent years.

However, the 29-year-old has decided to return for the Long Beach road race in April with Rahal Letterman Lanigan Racing.

"The team has proven their speed and technical excellence in the past and I can't wait to start working with everybody," he said.

FOOTBALL

Wembley dreams still intact for plucky Darts

DARTFORD'S hopes of a Wembley final are still alive after they earned a replay in their FA Trophy quarter-final at Halifax.

Tony Burman's side were given a huge boost as Halifax went down to 10 men early on when Chris Worsley was given a straight red card.

But the home side took the lead shortly after through Lee Gregory.

Fortunately, Danny Harris found the net on 68 minutes for the Darts as the tie ended 1-1.

If they come through next Wednesday's home replay they will take on Grimsby Town in a two-legged semi-final, the first on February 16.

HOCKEY

Canterbury crash out in semis to champions

CAPTAIN Tom Richford said it had been a learning curve for Canterbury as they crashed out of the Maxifuel Supersixes indoor championship at the semi-final stage.

It was the furthest the side had ever been in the competition, but it was one step too far as they succumbed 9-5 to eventual champions East Grinstead in the semis at Wembley Arena.

Richford said: "It was a great experience for us. The team has not been here before, so it was a huge learning curve. The crowd was amazing – when you can't hear your coach at half-time it gives a good indication of the atmosphere."

IT WOULD be all too easy for Ben Greenhalgh to look back in anger at what might have been when he sees how his old Inter Milan team-mates are doing these days, making multi-million-pound moves and playing to packed stadia.

Instead, the 20-year-old, who is turning out for Maidstone United after his 18-month stay with the Nerazzurri ended a year ago, is getting his head down and trying to make it as a professional back in the UK, or, more precisely, Scotland.

Having won Sky One's Football's Next Star show back in 2010, the winger signed a deal at the San Siro, training with the reserves and first team occasionally under Jose Mourinho, while also having a loan spell in Italy's third tier with Como.

But towards the end of last season he came back to former club Welling United and in the summer joined Ebbsfleet United as he looked to build his career back on home shores. However, a lack of playing time with the Fleet saw him join forces with the Stones at the start of January in what would appear a major fall from grace.

"I knew this could happen. I could have stayed in Italy, but it was a decision I had to make. I had the opportunities, but I decided I wanted to come back here," he said.

"The situation with Maidstone might be a step too low at the moment, but it looks like they will be promoted. It's not a league I expected to be playing in."

His move to the Gallagher Stadium isn't a case of wasted talent but a bid to get himself in the shop window.

He is doing exactly that at Scottish Premier League side Inverness Caledonian Thistle, who are second at the moment under the guidance of former England legend Terry Butcher. He spent a week there earlier this month and starts a second trial there on Sunday this weekend.

"I didn't know how well they were doing until I got up there," said Greenhalgh, who hails from Orpington.

"The whole set-up is very relaxed. I did a week of training, which is why I'm going back up so I can maybe play in some games."

It's a case of rebuilding his reputation, which he feels went off the footballing radar while in Italy. However, he has no regrets about his time abroad, having come through the ranks and remained friends with players plying their trade in Serie A at present.

In fact, his old room-mate Mattias Destro signed for Roma for £10 million in the summer to replace Liverpool new boy Fabio Borini. He has also earned four caps and scored once for Italy; his first game came as a starter in a friendly against England while Greenhalgh was sitting on the bench at Stonebridge Road.

"One thing the show did was put me out there in the public, even if there were a few critics of it," he said.

"At the same time, being on the show and being in Italy meant a lot of clubs forgot about me because I was away for so long. When I came back I realised how hard it is to get into a side.

"If it was the same situation here being at a club like Inter, then the interest might have been a little higher."

It's no use moaning and groaning about it, says Ebbsfleet chairman as donations flood in to keep club ticking over

FUNDS: Cash flow not helped by postponements

EBBSFLEET United chairman Jessica McQueen has called on supporters to work together with the club as it continues to live on a hand-to-mouth basis.

The Blue Square Premier side appealed for financial support from fans at the end of last week, with the shock message of 'Lose your pounds or lose your club' catching the attention.

It came about because the Fleet haven't had a home game since January 1, with two being postponed, meaning they've missed out on vital income, leaving them with a cash-flow problem.

Since then, just under £20,000 has been raised through donations, merchandise sales in the club shop and a cash injection from fans internet ownership group www.myfootballclub.co.uk.

After reassuring fans the club isn't heading towards administration, McQueen is urging everyone to pull together until the time a new investor comes forward.

"It's no use people moaning and groaning about it – until someone comes in and makes an offer, we have to work together," she said.

"No one has asked to speak to me or the other director here – we have no offers on the table. We have to take a pragmatic view.

"The budget is set at the start of the season but is looked at each month. It's never going to be easy – no one goes into football thinking they're going to make loads of money.

"We've not had a home game since January 1, which is a long time.

"We still have bills to pay and we have had two programmes printed but not sold – there's food and drink brought in for the bar."

However, Emily Connolly, vice-chairman of fans group The Fleet Trust, which part-owns the club, is worried administration could one day become a possibility.

"It's the age-old problem that if we keep on doing this, we will move towards that," she said.

Gills team of the Century

This season marks the 100th anniversary of the Gills being known as Gillingham, having originally being founded as New Brompton. We are celebrating those we think deserve a place in the team of the century.

CHRIS HOPE

DOB: November 14, 1972
Gills stats: 264 appearances, 15 goals
Clubs: Darlington, Nottingham Forest, Scunthorpe Utd, Gillingham

CHRIS Hope's time at Gillingham coincided with the club reaching its highest-ever Football League finishes.

The gutsy defender, who's still playing at the age of 41 for the newly-reformed AFC Rushden & Diamonds, was part of the Gills foray into the unknown of the old Division One for the 2000/01 season.

He had already earned himself a solid reputation as a fans' favourite at Scunthorpe, from where Andy Hessenthaler signed him for £250,000 after Gills' promotion from Division Two.

He started his career as a trainee at Darlington in 1989 and he moved on to Nottingham Forest at the beginning of the 1990/91 season.

However, he didn't make a breakthrough at either club and joined Scunthorpe for £50,000 for the 1993/94 campaign. He went on to make 333 appearances at Glanford Park but was prized away after seven seasons for Gillingham's new adventure, having achieved the impressive feat of 177 consecutive appearances.

He made his Gills debut in the opening game of the 2000/01 season in the 3-1 home defeat to Stockport County, having penned a four-year deal.

He was a mainstay alongside Guy Butters, playing 176 successive games before missing one through suspension in 2003. He was made captain for the 2005/06 season following the departure of Paul Smith but missed much of it through injury. His final appearance in a Gills shirt came in a 3-3 draw at Bradford on the final day of the 05/06 season.

He was released and went on to play for Rushden & Diamonds, Corby Town and St Neots Town.
